

Transition Planning and Possibilities

February 28th at 7:00 pm

Gretchen Levine, M.A.Ed., Transition Specialist, The Katherine Thomas School

Are you worried about what path your student will take after high school? Transition planning can help you with the answers. There is a range of possibilities out there if you dream and prepare! Transition planning varies among students because each student has unique needs, strengths, interests and preferences. Students and families are central to the transition planning process – they contribute the most important voices. Learning about the types of supports and services that are available to help with transition empowers students and their families to create transition plans that best meet their unique needs. Participants will learn about transition resources available for young adults and the application processes, as well as timelines involved in planning for the future.
